Taeko Heiser: National Orchid Garden, Singapore

The National Orchid Garden was opened on October 20, 1995 by Mr. Lee Kuan Yew. It is located on the highest hill in the Singapore Botanic Gardens. The collection of live orchids is the largest in the world, with about 60 000 specimens, including 1000 species and over 2000 hybrids.

The National Garden’s collection is constantly being complemented with new flowers, brought in from around the world. The distinctive feature of the National Orchid Garden is its design concept which presents the display of plants in four separate color zones over most of its area, showcasing selected trees, shrubs, herbs and orchids (mostly hybrids) with matching foliage and floral colors:
